

Moon Transit Proves Flat Earth is Bogus

About a year and a half ago I did a series of videos debunking the Flat Earth nonsense, and the reason I did that is because there was an avalanche of videos at that time promoting the idea that the earth is not a globe, but of course that is nonsense. What was interesting to me that in many of these new videos, the poster identified himself as either a Christian or a Bible believer or a 9/11 truther. And I began to understand that this had to be a psyop from the deep state. In other words they wanted to make Bible believing Christians or 9/11 truthers look like kooks.

Well I have a little sidebar I would like to edit this time: there are zero astronomers who will tell you that the earth is flat, but there are thousands of architects and engineers, who question the official government storyline on what happened on 9/11. In any event, I am still getting comments on those videos, and I got an interesting one this week from Peter J226, and he is beginning to be swayed by the Flat Earth nonsense. So I am going to, (on this program) give you a really perfect demonstration, in my opinion, that the earth must be a globe. Now here's what he wrote. "I have not decided whether or not I believe the Flat Earth model. I do know however, that I'm not part of any psyop. I am a private individual with no ties to any organization except the Catholic Church."

Now that's kind of a red flag for me, because he identifies himself as a Catholic. Is he trying to make Catholics look like kooks? I am simply pointing out your error, when you contend that the sun and the moon do not shrink in size at sunset or moonset. Well I took this as a challenge, and would you believe, last night I went out every hour on the hour (I set my alarm) and I took a photograph of the moon, because we had clear skies, and it was a full moon. And I demonstrate very clearly, that the moon does not change size, or the sun, as far as that goes, as it traverses the sky from the eastern horizon to the western horizon and it would have to on a Flat Earth model. It would be just like an airplane going overhead; it would be small in the distance, get larger overhead, at full size, and then it would get small again as it approached the other horizon, but the neither the moon nor the sun do that.

So let's take a look at the first video I took at 9:30 last night. Now this is 9.30 pm, August the 8th, Eastern Standard Daylight Time and this was approximately 40 minutes after moonrise. I was not able to get far enough away from the horizon to view the actual moonrise.

9.30 pm

The camera was set at full zoom so as to make the image as large as possible on your screen, so that you can actually measure the diameter of the moon in this image, and at every hour.

Now I actually set my alarm for every hour last night, so I could get up and take a picture of the moon and the skies cooperated, and I show very clearly the moon does not change size, as it goes across the sky.

Let's look at the next hour. Now this shot was taken at 10.30 pm last night. Check out the diameter of the moon, and you will see there is no change from the size of the moon at 9.30 pm.

10.30 pm

Okay, now let's check the size of the moon one hour later. This is 11.30 pm August the 8th, last night. This is a full moon and it has now traversed two full hours across the night sky, and, as you can see, there has been no change to the moon's diameter.

11.30 pm

Now in this next clip, the moon does look a little small, and that is because it's my fault. I goofed up on the zoom. I didn't quite zoom it in as much as I should have.

12.30 am

This is 12.30 am this morning August the 9th, and as you can see there are some clouds which have moved in, and unfortunately as I mentioned, I messed up on the camera's zoom. I did not zoom it in all the way. So in this particular shot, the moon does appear slightly smaller, but that's my fault entirely. Now in the next image, the moon is just about at perigee, and according to the Flat Earth theory it should be much larger than it appeared four hours earlier just after moonrise.

1.30 am

This image was taken at 1.30 am this morning, and in this view there are still some clouds, but I have corrected the zoom on my camera, and as you can see there is absolutely no size difference from my earlier images. Of course, on a Flat Earth model, there should be at least twice the size of the moon compared to moonrise.

Now this demonstration, that the moon stays the same size all night long is very simple to do; you can do it yourself if you don't mind staying up all night long or setting your alarm, that is. It is now 2.30 am in the morning August 9th, this morning, Eastern Daylight Time, and the moon is still the exact same size.

2.30 am

It's about this time that the moon should start getting smaller, that is, if the Flat Earth model were real. Okay, moving on to 3.30 am;

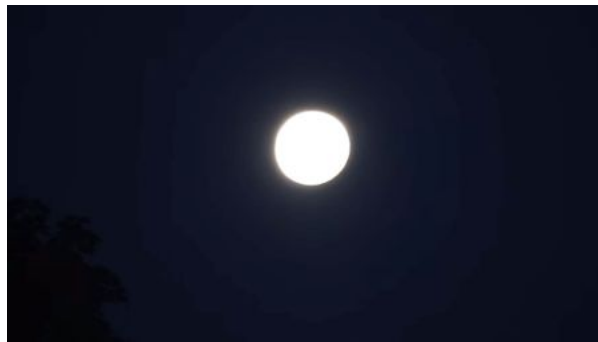

3.30 am

again no change in the size of the moon. Let's move on to 4.30 am.

4.30 am

It's now 4.30 in the morning and still no size change. This is more than seven hours after moonrise. You flat earthers have got to be feeling rather silly, just about now. Now the next image at 5.30 also shows no change in the size of the moon.

5.30 am

Now in this view at 5.30 you can maybe see in this shot that the sky is beginning to brighten just a little bit, with a little color showing up. According to the Flat Earth model, the moon's diameter should be much, much smaller than a few hours ago at perigee. Now in the next image the sun was beginning to come up and the moon was starting to fade. so this was the last picture I was able to take this morning. It is 6.30 am now.

6.30 am

The moon does not set for another hour, but it was already fading from view. Please note however that the moon was not getting any smaller. That's because in all of these images, the moon remains at a near constant 250,000 miles from Earth, not overhead, as the flat earthers would have you believe.

Now the beauty of this demonstration is that you could do it yourself. Anyone can set up a camera, that is as long as you're willing to stay up all night or set your alarm and get up every hour like I did this morning, and I did this because I know there are a lot of sincere people who are taken in by the Flat Earth nonsense. They know the government lies to us; therefore they think that maybe NASA lies about the globular shape of the earth. But scientists have been teaching about the globular shape of the earth for hundreds of years. and they are correct. and it is the flat earthers from the deep state in this case, who are trying to fool you. They want Christians to look like idiots. They want 9/11 truthers to look like idiots. Don't be fooled.
