

William Tapley Apologizes for "Vatican Deception" Error

I made a major error in my last video, where I practically accused the Vatican of deception in posting a concluding speech by Pope Francis that was different than the actual speech he gave. Whereas in fact, one of my subscribers has discovered that, the original speech which I called, the original speech was Pope Francis' concluding speech to last year's Synod. In the newer speech which you can now find on the Vatican website, was a conclusion to this year's Synod. So I believe my commentary still remains. It retains a lot of added validity, because I am surprised that the Pope said those things about the bishops.

Now here's what's Scrantonman95 wrote to me, because he's the one that alerted me to this. "I think the Raleigh version of the speech was the Pope's address from last year, as evidenced by two of the last three paragraphs of the speech. He refers to how we still have one year to reflect on the Relazioni." I think you are correct Mr. Scrantonman95 and I read that part of the speech, and it didn't dawn on me that he was referring to last year's speech, because I thought that maybe we still had a year left this year, to reflect on the conclusions of the Synod.

Actually I believe the Pope is going to react much sooner, and I still believe; I still claim that he will allow communion for divorced and remarried Catholics. I hope he doesn't. I hope to continue praying my rosary that he doesn't, and I urge all of you my subscribers to also pray against this possibility. And once again, I apologize to all of you. I really regret making that video now. However I will leave it up, because as I say, some of it, I believe is valid, and besides I have a policy of never removing any of my videos. I may regret that decision now unfortunately.
