

Who Was First, Me or Scott Clarke? You Decide

Before I get into the topic of this program, I want to show you that I have improved a great deal my image of the Great Sign on September 23rd when it appears in the constellations and I have put Virgo, who is delivering a baby, in a hospital gown at least, so she does not appear naked.

Scott Clarke complained about that; he called it 'weird' and since Virgo represents the Blessed Virgin Mary, and not Israel, I agree this is much more appropriate to show her in childbirth but wearing also a hospital gown. Speaking of Scott Clarke, he has always said that he discovered this Revelation 12 sign of September the 23rd, even though he posted his first video three months after I posted my first video. And he tells his subscribers that he posted on websites about this sign and he described it and I dispute that because he has never been able to tell us where those sites are. Well yesterday, a YouTuber by the name of HamrickCE says he has discovered one of those sites. I'll clue you in, it's all a pack of lies, but I don't want to influence you too much. I will let him describe what he has discovered; here is a clip from that video which he posted just yesterday.

'Let me introduce you to Rex Fritchey, I believe he's in Florida, and I did a little bit of digging just to figure out what's going on and he has this blog here, I'm going to leave a link down there if you'd like to take a look at it. It's Revelation Revealed by Rex Fritchey.com and he started this in January 2011 from what I can tell. So anyway, but what I found very interesting is by heading down here we take a look and he says confirming the year in 2017 is possibly the Mid Tribulation which was what we were thinking early on because Revelation 12 is 2017, it has to be the midpoint, right? Anyway, he goes at chapter 12, gives his four signs, you know, the woman clothed with the sun, the moon at her feet, and we can read it over, but he explains that the king planet, Jupiter, is right between the constellation's legs. I'll let you read this if you'd like to take a look at it. This is posted on January 12, 2011. Now to even take it one step further, he mentions Scottie Clarke in January and it's the post right above here. Let's see if I can just find it real fast, where is it, let's see, so this is his post, Ezekiel 14:21, and he starts talking about, you know, the Revelation 12 sign, a little bit here and there and he says right there let me highlight that for you, another party did this research, so he's not taking credit for it, and I could not ascertain who came up with it, so he's not really sure but he does say although I believe Scottie Clark is aware of this same information as well as whether or not he discovered it himself and this was January 15, 2011 nearly three months before Tapley posted up his YouTube video claiming that he is the one that discovered the Revelation 12 sign, so.'

Well I guess I would be smug too, like Mr. Hamrick, if I did not like William Tapley and I was trying to prove that Scottie Clark did indeed discover the Revelation 12 sign on September the 23rd. Of course, his whole argument depends on the accuracy of Fritchey's website. Are those dates for real? Well I went to his website, and I'll put a link to it below, and according to him he posted seven different articles in January of 2011 and I thought I would read through his articles to see if there was anything in there that would verify that date. In other words, was there any historical reference of things which occurred at that same time and I could not find any. So I said gee, do you think Scott Clarke really did discover this sign? I mean my confidence wavered there for a minute. But then I thought, well let's take a look at the next month, which was February, 2011, or at least that's when Rex Fritchey claimed it occurred, and here is where things get sticky for Mr. Fritchey. Let's read his post from supposedly that date February 2011.

'Month: February 2011. The strait of Hormuz: the Antithesis Factor. February 28, 2011, or so he claims. Iran has been quoted as saying that they would close the Strait of Hormuz cutting off oil exports if the West imposes sanctions on Iran's oil shipments. Israel receives much of her oil through these Straits etc'.

The Strait Of Hormuz: The Antithesis Factor

February 28, 2011 - Leave a comment

Iran has been quoted as saying that 'they would close the Strait of Hormuz, cutting off oil exports if the West imposes sanctions on Iran's oil shipments.' Israel receives much of her oil through these Straits and would have to do whatever was necessary, militarily, to keep the oil flowing just for their own, personal survival.

Our President finds himself in a precarious position of providing the kindling (or the antithesis

So here is a very specific historical reference. But did this occur in February of 2011 or is Mr. Rex Fritchey pulling the wool over our eyes? Now if the dates on Rex Fritchey's website are accurate that would indicate that Scott Clarke did discover the Revelation 12 sign before I did in April of 2011. So I thought I would look up the historical events that happened in February 2011 and there was no reference to Iran threatening to close the Straits of Hormuz. But if you Google that event, if you type in the exact phrase as found on Fritchey's website, 'they would close the Strait of Hormuz, cutting off oil exports if the West imposes sanctions on Iran's oil shipments', it did occur in January of 2012, at least that is when practically all the articles I read on that incident were posted. In other words, almost 11 months after Fritchey claims that he knew all about it.

In fact, let me look at the Wikipedia article, and this is: '2011-12 Strait of Hormuz dispute from Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia. The 2011 - 12 Strait of Hormuz dispute is an ongoing dispute between a coalition of countries and Iran. The dispute arose on 27 December 2011 when Iranian Vice President Mohammad Reza Rahimi threatened to close the Strait of Hormuz.' Something is very rotten in Scottie Clarke land! This is a full 11 months after Rex Fritchey claims that this event occurred. So why did Rex Fritchey fake this 2011 news article?

2011–12 Strait of Hormuz dispute

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

The 2011–12 Strait of Hormuz dispute is an ongoing dispute between a coalition of countries and Iran. The dispute arose on 27 December 2011, when an Iranian Vice President Mohammad-Reza Rahimi threatened to close the Strait of Hormuz.^[2]

Subsequently, a number of naval drills and missile tests were carried out by Iran. A coalition of countries responded by sending a flotilla of warships to deter any Iranian attempt to close the Strait of Hormuz and warned Iran publicly and through letters not to close the Strait.

The dispute was interjected by a European Union sanction banning oil exports from Iran to Europe on 23 January 2012 in an attempt to deter Iran from continuing with their nuclear program. Oil exports contribute to about 80% of Iranian public revenue,^[3] with roughly 20% being exported to Europe. Asian countries such as Japan and South Korea, which both account for 26% of Iran's oil exports have expressed a willingness to reduce oil exports from Iran.^[4]

It occurred much later than the date he has on his website. I submit to you that he changed that date. But why would he do that? He's already fooled us with the January 2011 date.

- August 2012
- July 2012
- June 2012
- April 2012
- February 2012
- November 2011
- September 2011
- July 2011
- April 2011
- February 2011
- January 2011

And here I suspect is the reason: if you look at his website he lists his past articles and you will see there is a gap between January 2011 and April 2011 when I believe he actually started his website. And that would look rather awkward so he had to put a supposed news article between January 2011, which is fake, and April 2011, which was his first real site.

And where did he get this from? Well if you look at that list of his past articles you will see there are no postings on January 2012. I submit that he took that article and changed the date to February 2011. That would make a whole lot more sense because then his article on Iran threatening to close Hormuz would line up with the dates of all the other articles on the Internet; in other words, January 2012, not February 2011. But here is the real kicker: let's look at what else he wrote at the bottom of his supposed post on February the 28th, 2011. If we scroll down on his February the 28th, 2011 posting, we will see a very interesting phrase at the very bottom: 'have a blessed New Year'.

Are you kidding me? Rex Fritchey waits until February the 28th to wish his readers a blessed New Year? What! Are you serious? Paul Begley, come and help me out on this. I know you've had Scott Clarke on your program.

I suspect that he and Hamrick and Rex Fritchey are all phony as $3 bills! Does it make sense that you would post seven articles in January, 2011, and not one of them would you say 'have a blessed New Year'? But on February the 28th, 2011, suddenly you wish your readers a 'blessed New Year'. Something is rotten in Scotty Clarke land. I don't believe any of these people. Both the January 2011 and February 2011 articles have been doctored. Those are not the dates they were posted. If you believe that then you were born yesterday. Look at my hair; I'm 78. I was not born yesterday. I can tell phonies when I see them. So here's what they have got to do: Scott Clarke, you have got to disassociate yourself from Hamrike and Fritchey. Those guys have concocted a scheme, in my opinion, to try to make it look as if you discovered the Revelation 12 sign. You know you did not and you have got to tell your subscribers that these people are not helping you one bit. I mean, you tell your people that Jesus was not serious, was not talking to Christians in the End Times, when he said 'no man knows the day or the hour'. That is a phony lie and you are proving your mettle with this video by Hamrick. And Mr. Hamrick: you have got to tell your people that you were lying. You've got to apologize for calling me a liar, which you do over and over again in your video.

And Mr. Fritchey, you claim to be a Christian; well let me tell you, Christians don't bear false witness against their neighbors. They do not break the Ten Commandments. You have got to retract what you did on your website because what you are doing is against the truth; you are hurting people. You are letting other people slander my name and this is not Christian. You are of the Antichrist when you do that. And so that is my information for you my subscribers today. And by the way, for you subscribers who put links to Hamrick video, which slander me and call me a liar, I hope you now go on his video and post this response video because he needs to know the truth. Maybe he was fooled. Maybe he honestly thinks RexFritchey.com is a true website. It isn't; it's all one big lie.
